

What is the LUCKY CHANGEMAKER grant for?

- Projects in which art is a catalyst for social change and that showcase how art's social dimension can address cultural responsiveness and responsibility.
- Projects that feature artists who engage socially underprivileged community members who would normally not have access to culture as equal partners.
- All disciplines are eligible if they are engaged with physicality, movement and performance (including dance, visual arts, literary arts, theatre, film/video, music, performance-based arts, interdisciplinary/ hybrid arts).
- We value the process as much as the product. Relationship building is a key goal and projects do not have to automatically result in a physical artwork or a performance. Workshops, training, studio practice are eligible, if they directly relate to achieving outcomes of a community-based project.

LUCKY TRIMMER is on the hunt for daring socially engaged artistic projects that embody the LUCKY spirit!

Are you an independent artist or a collective who demonstrates artistic excellence and uses their practice as an innovative conduit for a social cause? Does your project incorporate physicality, movement or performance in an effort to create meaningful change in your community, city, country or the world at large? We might be looking for you...

How can art connect local communities and social minorities? How can artists encourage under resourced communities to overcome barriers, to participate in creative process and create equitable access to culture? How can artists or art organisations create conversations and social change through art? How can we increase environmental awareness or promote social equality through the arts? These are the questions we pose to you!
